

Hi Everyone (students and parents),

Midyear exams at BHS take place January 24-26. There are just 3 weekends before exam week and with four to six units to review in each of their classes, the best way to reduce stress is to plan. Here is one example of what planning might look like.

This weekend:

- Find all tests and quizzes from each unit since September.
- Choose one test that did not go well and retake it.
- Print a clean copy of the review for that unit and work through those problems as well. I've consolidated some materials for sophomores here, and for juniors here.
- Schedule a time next week to meet with me for help.

MLK weekend:

- Choose 2-3 other units that were either difficult or are rusty from time gone by and retake those tests.
- Print clean copies of those review sheets and work through all types of problems.
- Schedule a time to see me with questions.

The weekend before exams:

- Review remaining units that went well and/or were recently taught. Redo tests and review sheets as needed.
- There will not be time for many questions the Monday of exam week (sophomores don't even have class). Students who leave all their studying for this last weekend may discover they need help when it's too late.

Please don't hesitate to contact me with questions or concerns.
